Category: Audio, music

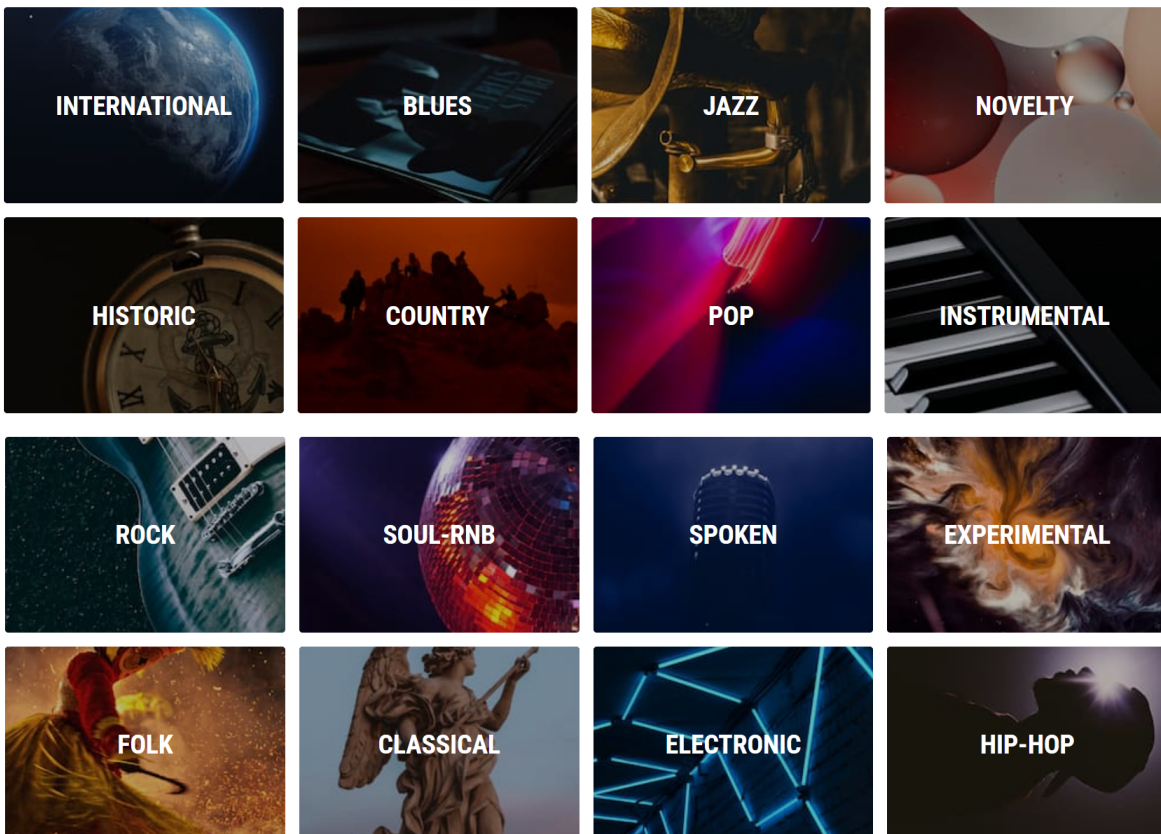

Powered by Tribe of Noise and Creative Commons licenses, Free Music Archive offers free and open licensed access to original music by independent artists, providing sustainable sharing spaces for creators and users. Visitors can choose to compensate artists directly when possible, but all the content can be used for free with minimal crediting.

The online catalogue is visited by tens of millions of monthly visitors, and its content is available for personal or commercial use in a wide variety of media projects, featured in videos, podcasts, films, games, apps, commercials, documentaries, etc., through collaborations between artists, curators, netlabels, filmmakers, radio stations, venues, artist collectives, museums, music festivals, and more!

This screenshot is a zoomed-in view of the download modal for the track "Sovereign Quarter" by Kevin MacLeod. The modal contains a warning icon and text: "You must give appropriate credit: Song title, artist name, source (Free Music Archive) and license type (CC BY)". It also lists "Personal and commercial use allowed" and a "More details" link. A prominent orange button says "I understand and agree". To the right, there is a separate box asking "Need royalty-free music for podcast, YouTube, Instagram and more?" with a "Try Tribe of Noise PRO" button. The background shows the search results table from the previous screenshot.
